psychology A detailed biography of the author Mind is defined as the faculty or power by which creatures feel think and will think This definition is inadequate and circular in nature but it is inevitable for mind can be defined only in its own terms and only by reference to its own processes Perhaps the simplest method of conveying the idea of the existence and nature of the mind is that attributed to a well known German psychologist who was not willing to start his course by asking his students to think about something his desk for example Then he would say Now think about what you think about the desk And after a break he would add This thing that thinks about the desk and you re talking about now is the topic of our Psychology Study The professor couldn t have said more if he had been teaching for a month

Your Mind and How to Use It; a Manual of Practical Psychology William Walker Atkinson, 2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1911 edition Excerpt CHAPTER II The Mechanism of Mental States THE mechanism of mental states the mental machinery by means of which we feel think and will consists of the brain nervous system and the organs of sense No matter what may be the real nature of mind no matter what may be the theory held regarding its activities it must be admitted that the mind is dependent upon this mechanism for the manifestation of what we know as mental states Wonderful as is the mind it is seen to be dependent upon this physical mechanism for the expression of its activities And this dependence is not upon the brain alone but also upon the entire nervous system The best authorities agree that the higher and more complex mental states are but an evolution of simple sensation and that they are dependent upon sensation for their raw material of feeling and thought Therefore it is proper that we begin by a consideration of the machinery of sensation This necessitates a previous consideration of the nerves The Nerves The body is traversed by an intricate system of nerves which has been likened to a great telegraph system The nerves transmit sensations from the various parts of the body to the great receiving office of the brain They also serve to transmit the motor impulses from the brain to the various parts of the body which impulses result in motion of appropriate parts of the body There are also other nerves with which we have no concern in this book but which perform certain physiological functions such as digestion secretion excretion and circulation Our chief concern at this point is with the sensory nerves The sensory nerves convey the impressions of the outside world to the brain The brain is the great central station of the

Your Mind and How to Use It William Walker Atkinson, 2020-05-25 The unconscious mind or the unconscious consists of the processes in the mind which occur automatically and are not available to introspection and include thought processes memories interests and motivations Even though these processes exist well under the surface of conscious awareness they are theorized to exert an impact on behavior The term was coined by the 18th century German Romantic philosopher Friedrich Schelling and later introduced into English by the poet and essayist Samuel Taylor Coleridge Empirical evidence suggests that unconscious phenomena include repressed feelings automatic skills subliminal perceptions and automatic reactions and possibly also complexes hidden phobias and desires Your Mind and
