Abstract: Unintended and avoidable deaths of the elderly by poisoning are a significant issue for the United States health care system. This study examined the impact of the following risk factors on avoidable deaths of the elderly by poisoning: age, gender, race, education, income, insurance status, and comorbidities. Data from the 1997 National Health and Medical Examination Survey were analyzed using logistic regression. Results showed that older age, female gender, white race, higher education, higher income, and private insurance were associated with a lower risk of avoidable deaths of the elderly by poisoning. Comorbidities were not found to be associated with avoidable deaths of the elderly by poisoning.

Many Americans did depend more and more heavily on gas from Saudi Arabia. American politicians argued for their future military "strategic interest." Military leaders pushed for strategic reasons. Some considered acquisition necessary to bring the world's petroleum supplies under American control. Others saw a bottom line. These leaders argued for withdrawal of troops and nuclear war.
