

Ideology/ Genre

Beyonce plays a role whereby she takes on the daily routine of her partner until of course we find that halfway through a climatic, post-party argument, the tables turn have turned and Beyonce is in fact the neglected half of the duo whilst on the other hand, her partner is the insensitive one.

The ideological message within the video isn't so much underlying. The video masquerades the empowerment on gender roles within relationships and how people can be manipulated in these positions. The video tries to show that anyone within a relationship can be taken for granted and that perhaps, if people were more considerate of their loved one's feelings and were careful with their own actions, hurting them emotionally can inevitably be avoided.

As an artist, Beyonce Knowles has always been primarily established as an R&B singer, songwriter and record producer. Occasionally however, Beyonce has always put forward several tracks that can be categorised into the pop genre.

The song 'If I were a boy' adheres to the musical genre because as the song is relatively a medium paced ballad, it takes advantage of promoting the artist to target a varied target audience which allows the music video to be promoted on several music channels.
