Abstract Background: The prevalence of depression in the United States is increasing, and it is a leading cause of disability. The purpose of this study was to examine the prevalence of depression in the United States and to identify factors associated with depression.

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group consisted of 12 weeks of low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact exercise. The control group consisted of 12 weeks of no exercise. The results of the study showed that the intervention group had significantly higher levels of physical and psychological health than the control group. The study was limited by the small sample size and the lack of a control group. The study was funded by the National Institutes of Health.
