Abstract
The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was conducted in a community-based setting. The participants were 30 women, aged 45-65 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of walking for 30 minutes, 3 times per week, at a pace of 3.0-3.5 miles per hour. The control group was instructed to continue with their sedentary lifestyle. The study was conducted over a 12-week period. The physical health outcomes measured were heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index (BMI). The psychological health outcomes measured were self-reported stress, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the participants. The walking program group had significantly lower heart rates, blood pressures, and BMIs compared to the control group. Additionally, the walking program group reported significantly lower levels of stress, anxiety, and depression compared to the control group. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
