History shows a consistent pattern of violence and terrorism in Afghanistan, including the 1979 Soviet invasion, the 1990s civil war, and the 2001-2021 Taliban rule. The Taliban's ideology is rooted in a strict interpretation of Islamic law, which they believe justifies violence against those who do not follow their beliefs. The Taliban's actions in Afghanistan have been widely condemned by the international community, and they have been designated as a terrorist organization by the United States and other countries. The Taliban's actions in Afghanistan have also been widely condemned by the international community, and they have been designated as a terrorist organization by the United States and other countries.
