

The Impossible Victory: Vietnam

From 1864 to 1972, the most intense and most powerful nation in the history of the world made a continuous military effort, with everything short of atomic bombs, to defeat a nationless revolutionary government in a deep, peasant country—and failed. When the United States fought in Vietnam, it was organized modern technology versus organized human beings, and the human beings won.

In the course of that war, they developed in the United States the greatest machine movement that nation had ever experienced, a machine that played a critical part in bringing the war to an end.

It was another startling fact of the clock.

In the fall of 1945 Japan, defeated, was forced to leave Indochina, the former French colony it had occupied at the start of the war. In the meantime, a revolutionary movement had grown there, determined to end colonial control and to achieve a new life for the peasants of Indochina. Led by a Communist named Ho Chi Minh, the revolutionists fought against the Japanese, and when they were given some token independence in August in late 1945, with a million people in the streets, and issued a Declaration of Independence. It borrowed from the Declaration of the Rights of Man and the Citizen, in the French Revolution, and from the American Declaration of Independence, and began: "All men are created equal. They are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among them are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness." Just as the Americans in 1776 had listed these guarantees against the English King, the Vietnamese listed their complaints against French rule:

They have violated human laws. . . . They have made more prisons than prisons. They have mercilessly slain our parents, they have destroyed villages in view of blood. They have destroyed public institutions. . . . They have robbed us of our rice fields, our homes, our forests, and our own mother's milk.

They have invented machines and machines have used weapons and people, machinery and people, in a state of endless poverty.

From the end of last year, in the beginning of this year . . . must
