War in the Garden of Eden Kermit Roosevelt, 2020-02-07 It was at Taranto that we embarked for Mesopotamia Reinforcements were sent out from

England in one of two ways either all the way round the Cape of Good Hope or by train through France and Italy down to the desolate little seaport of Taranto and thence by transport over to Egypt through the Suez Canal and on down the Red Sea to the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf The latter method was by far the shorter but the submarine situation in the Mediterranean was such that convoying troops was a matter of great difficulty Taranto is an ancient Greek town situated at the mouth of a landlocked harbor the entrance to which is a narrow channel certainly not more than two hundred yards across The old part of the town is built on a hill and the alleys and runways winding among the great stone dwellings serve as streets As is the case with maritime towns it is along the wharfs that the most interest centres During one afternoon I wandered through the old town and listened to the fisherfolk singing as they overhauled and mended their nets Grouped around a stone archway sat six or seven women and girls They were evidently members of one family a grandmother her daughters and their children The old woman wild dark and hawk featured was blind and as she knitted she chanted some verses I could only understand occasional words and phrases but it was evidently a long epic At intervals her listeners would break out in comments as they worked but like Othere the old sea captain she neither paused nor stirred
