F. R. Henderson, 2017-11-22 Excerpt from Stonewall Jackson and the American Civil War Vol 2 of 2 Before Yorktown, McClellan's five army corps had been held in check first by men then by protected by earthworks of feeble profile. 1 The fort at Gloucester Point was the key of the Confederate lines. McClellan, however, although a division was actually under orders to move against it, appears to have been unwilling to risk a failure. 3 The channel of the York was thus closed both to his transports and the gunboats, and he did nothing whatever to interfere with Johnston's long line of communications which passed at several points within easy reach of the river bank. Nor had he been more active since he had reached West Point. Except for a single expedition which had dispersed a Confederate division near Hanover Court House north of the Chickahominy, he had made no aggressive movement. He had never attempted to test the strength of the fortifications of Richmond to hinder their construction or to discover their weak points. His urgent demands for reinforcements had appeared in the Northern newspapers, and those newspapers had found their way to Richmond. From the same source the Confederates were made aware that he believed himself confronted by an army far larger than his own, and when, on the departure of Whiting's division for the Valley, he refused to take advantage of the opportunity to attack Lee's diminished force, it became abundantly clear, if further proof were wanting, that much might be ventured against so timid a commander.
