

Stoichiometry of Airbags

When automobile airbags are activated in a collision, they rapidly inflate with gas. This is achieved with a chemical reaction, a decomposition reaction, where a small amount of solid sodium azide (NaN_3) rapidly decomposes to sodium metal and nitrogen gas:

It is the nitrogen gas which fills the airbag. A very precise amount of sodium azide needs to be placed inside the airbag during the manufacturing process. Using your knowledge of stoichiometry, explain why you think it is important to use such a precise quantity of sodium azide.
