

Every summer, for the past five years, Adrian had spent six weeks at his grandmother's house in a rural area of the state. Unfortunately for the young boy, his grandmother had several rather old-fashioned ideas about caring for boys, ideas that included the use of spankings, washing his mouth out with soap if he said a bad word, and petticoat discipline. At first, Adrian would beg and plead with his grandmother not to petticoat him, but he quickly learned that the more he protested, the worse things got for him. In particular, he learned that any pleadings along the lines of "but I'm a boy" would simply make his grandmother quite angry and would result in a deeply unpleasant mouth soaping. And so, to avoid that most unpleasant of punishments, Adrian wore (without complaint) whatever his grandmother told him to wear, and when his grandmother dressed him in panties and dresses and asked if he was going to be a good girl for her, he would simply answer "Yes, Grandma. I'll be the best girl I can be for you".
