

TURBOLASER TOWER

The most common capital ship weapons in the galaxy, turbolasers are low-mass, supercharged laser cannons. The most powerful laser projection in energy from this series, the turbolaser's main advantage, which continues with a stream of ionized laser gas to produce an intense heat. The ionized gas can heat the beam, providing a range that is double or more that of conventional laser cannons. The distributed power of the heat-energy field can punch through an enemy's shields and force armor yielding.

The Death Star had 5000 laser & laser artillery turbolaser towers. It housed tower housed four distinct sections housed within an armored hull. The top section housed the gas laser, which acted as a fuel center to provide a continuous air of fire. Two laser towers joined from the base, and would launch around the tower to cover the entire field of fire.

The second section of the tower contained rows of capacitor banks, which stored energy that the laser actuator converted into charged beams of intense light. This energy storage capability was crucial to enable the turbolasers to maintain rapid fire.

The third section housed the support crew and maintenance stations, and also the subcritical turbine generator required to power the tower.

The basement section of the tower contained the gunnery stations and fire tracking and targeting computers. Although gunnery were operated remotely, that helped them provide instant targeting for their guns. Only the targeting computers could keep track of multiple targets and direct the patterns to point out the missing enemy starfighters.

Safety features built into the targeting computers, didn't allow the tower to fire when any portion of the Death Star was within their sights. The Alliance considered this vulnerability by firing their starfighters, so close to the Death Star that the Imperial weapons automatically fired that the
