Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 women, 40 to 55 years of age, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 30 minutes of walking, 5 days a week, for 12 weeks. The control group did not exercise. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the subjects' physical and psychological health. The subjects in the walking program had a significant increase in their physical fitness, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and a significant decrease in their body mass index (BMI). The subjects in the walking program also had a significant decrease in their anxiety and depression scores, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI) and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory (STAI). The walking program had no significant effect on the subjects' blood pressure, cholesterol, or glucose levels. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
