QUESTION I have a 1994 Ford Taurus with 100,000 miles. The car has been running fine for the last 10 years, but recently I've noticed a slight vibration in the front end when driving at highway speeds. I've checked the tire pressure and found it to be correct. I've also noticed that the front end seems to be slightly lower than the rear end. What could be causing this vibration and how can I fix it?

ANSWER The vibration you're experiencing is likely due to a worn or damaged component in the front suspension or steering system. The fact that the front end seems lower than the rear end suggests a sagging spring or a worn shock absorber. To diagnose the problem, you should have a professional mechanic inspect the front suspension and steering components. They will likely check the following:

- 1. Shocks and Struts: Worn shocks or struts can cause a car to sag and vibrate. They can also affect the car's handling and braking performance.
- 2. Coil Springs: Sagging coil springs can cause the front end to sit lower than the rear end. They can also contribute to a bumpy ride and uneven tire wear.
- 3. Ball Joints and Tie Rods: Worn ball joints or tie rods can cause a car to vibrate and shimmy, especially at higher speeds. They can also affect the car's steering and alignment.
- 4. Wheel Alignment: A misaligned wheel can cause a car to vibrate and pull to one side. It can also lead to uneven tire wear.

Once the mechanic has identified the problem, they will recommend the appropriate repairs. In most cases, replacing the worn components will resolve the vibration and sagging issues. It's important to address these problems as soon as possible to ensure the safety and longevity of your vehicle.
