The 14th Amendment

In 1868, the 14th Amendment was added to the U.S. Constitution. It gave formerly enslaved people the right to citizenship. It also gave everyone the right to equal protection under the law.

Equal protection under the law means that everyone is treated the same by the law. No one should be treated differently because of their race, gender, or religion.

Black Codes

After the 14th Amendment was passed in 1868, many Southern states created laws known as Black Codes.

- Black Codes were laws that limited the rights and freedoms of African Americans.
- According to the Black Codes, freedmen could not have voting rights, own property, or work on their own. They were only allowed to work as slaves.

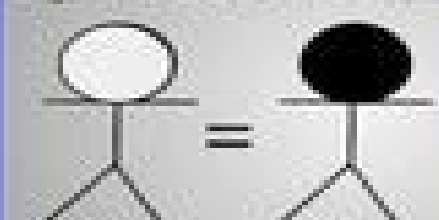

Discrimination

Discrimination is when someone treats you differently, unfairly or worse because of your age, being disabled, your gender, gender identity, being pregnant or having a child, your religion or beliefs, your race, skin color or where you were born, etc.

Equal Protection of the Law

Equal protection of the law means that states are not allowed to give any laws that discriminate against people. Everyone is treated the same by the law.

Congress also passed the process to amend the Constitution. This was done by adding the 14th Amendment. The first step to amend the Constitution was the proposal of the 14th Amendment.

- The first step of the 14th Amendment was to guarantee the citizenship of every person born in America. This would mean that formerly enslaved people would be citizens.
- The first step also passed to provide equal protection under the law.
