

Trash to treasure

A Tulsa artist goes a step beyond recycling.

by JUDY LANGDON

Tulsa decoupage/collage artist Jessica Woody converts waste — cans and vinyl records — into something better than the originals. They gain new life as signature gifts and works of art in her Eco-Friendly Freckles line.

Her work has been featured in two books available through Amazon.

When did you realize upcycling was your calling? I have been creating my hand-painted, upcycled decoupage artwork for seven years. Since I was a little girl, I have loved recycling and repurposing salvaged materials and transforming them into something new, functional and beautiful. But I was 19 years old when I first discovered that my upcycled creations, which I had been giving to friends and family members as gifts, needed to be available for the world to enjoy.

How important is the environmental aspect of your art? Over the years, my artistic calling to upcycle has been significantly fueled by my research, passion and eco-conscious concern for the welfare of our environment. Enlightening documentary films such as "Bag It," "Addicted to Plastic" and others have inspired me to pursue my creative outlet and eco-friendly endeavors.

Describe your artistic process. The materials and creative process that I use begin with recycled vinyl records or metal cans. All of my art pieces feature a glossy black background and white "freckles," which is my signature look. I have chosen this dramatic black and white dualism of color because it is strikingly eye-catching, and it beautifully complements the diverse color palette found in my hand-selected collage ephemera.

I carefully and intricately hand cut each piece of paper ephemera used in the art piece, which I select beforehand. I usually gather my paper clippings from various magazines, and I also occasionally incorporate inspirational typography messages from recycled Yogi brand tea tags. I select attractive imagery with colors that bring a balanced look to the completed work and that tell a visual story when placed together in a decoupage collage.

After I paste the images onto the vinyl record or canister in the precise order that I desire, I then surround each image with tiny white hand-painted "freckles." They are not perfectly symmetrical, which is where the inspiration of my Etsy shop name "Eco-Friendly Freckles" came from. After the paint dries, I brush on the glossy Mod Podge to complete the one-of-kind upcycled art piece.

You grew up making collages with your mother and twin sister, Andrea. How did that impact your work? My dear late mother, Vicki, who passed away after a long battle with multiple sclerosis, taught my sister and me how to make collages. It was such a precious craft activity shared during the cherished moments we had with her during our childhood — moments sadly cut short. Carrying on this heartfelt pastime into my life today brings a smile to my heart, and taking a hobby and transforming it into an art business reminds me of how proud my crafty mother would be of her daughter today, as she too was very creative. ☺
