Abstract—Results from a communication intervention for parents of low-income, urban, African American children are presented. The intervention was designed to help parents understand the importance of reading to their children and to provide them with the skills and resources to do so. The results of the intervention are presented in terms of parent knowledge, attitudes, and behaviors. The results show that the intervention was effective in increasing parent knowledge and attitudes and in increasing the frequency of reading to children. The results also show that the intervention was effective in increasing the frequency of reading to children in the home. The results suggest that the intervention was effective in increasing the frequency of reading to children in the home.
