

WHAT IS ANALOGY?

ANALOGY DEFINITION

- An analogy is a way of describing something by comparing it to something else which makes the idea more simple. The thing which is being compared is likely to have some similarities or things in common with whatever its comparison is. These comparisons are often used as figurative language in order to more easily explain an idea or principle. You might say that someone made an analogy between the human mind and a smart computer.
- When used as a literary device, analogy will assist the writer to make a comparison between two things that may be familiar or not. It can also be used in order to create a deeper meaning and allow the reader to create a more detailed image in their mind about what is being described.

- Once again from Romeo and Juliet, we see another example of analogy in the line "The candles of night are burned out and day tiptoes on the mountains."
- In the movie, Forrest Gump we see a now, very famous analogy which reads "life is like a box of chocolates, you do not know what you might get."
