Good writing is the product of proper training, much practice, and hard work. The following remarks, though they will not guarantee a top quality paper, should help you determine where best to direct your efforts. I offer first some general comments on philosophical writing, and then some specific "do"s and "don't"s.

One of the first points to be clear about is that a philosophical essay is quite different from an essay in most other subjects. That is because it is neither a research paper nor an exercise in literary self-expression. It is not a report of what various scholars have had to say on a particular topic. It does not present the latest findings of tests or experiments. And it does not present your personal feelings or impressions. Instead, it is a reasoned defense of a thesis. What does that mean?

Above all, it means that there must be a specific point that you are trying to establish - something that you are trying to convince the reader to accept - together with grounds or justification for its acceptance.

Before you start to write your paper, you should be able to state exactly what it is that you are trying to show. This is harder than it sounds. It simply will not do to have a rough idea of what you want to establish. A rough idea is usually one that is not well worked out, not clearly expressed, and as a result, not likely to be understood. Whether you actually do it in your paper or not, you should be able to state in a single short sentence precisely what you want to prove. If you cannot formulate your thesis this way, odds are you are not clear enough about it.

The next task is to determine how to go about convincing the reader that your thesis is correct. In two words, your method must be that of rational persuasion. You will present arguments. At this point, students frequently make one or more of several common errors. Sometimes they feel that since it is clear to them that their thesis is true, it does not need much argumentation. It is common to overestimate the strength of your own position. That is because you already accept that point of view. But how will your opponent respond? It is safest to assume that your reader is intelligent and knows a lot about your subject, but disagrees with you.

Another common mistake is to think that your case will be stronger if you mention, even if briefly, virtually every argument that you have come across in support of your position. Sometimes this is called the "fortress approach." In actual fact, it is almost certain that the fortress approach will not result in a very good paper. There are several reasons for this.

First, your reader is likely to find it difficult to keep track of so many different arguments, especially if these arguments approach the topic from different directions.

Second, the ones that will stand out will be the very best ones and the very worst ones. It is

Writing to Learn: An Introduction to Writing Philosophical Essays Anne Michaels Edwards, Anne Edwards, 1999-10-21 Based on the premise that one of the best ways for a student to understand a topic is to write about it this is a book that teaches students how to write philosophical essays Geared toward first time philosophy students the book is a supplement for any Philosophy course in which the instructor requires the students to write essays Most of the work involved in a Philosophy class is reading assigned material thinking about it and then writing about it whether on an exam or in an essay written outside of class This book is designed to make all three of those activities easier Writing to Learn begins with helpful hints on how to read philosophy chapter 2 In chapters 3 through 7 students are guided through several different types of essays beginning with the simplest summaries that demonstrate knowledge and understanding and progressing through essays that require the application of theories to new situations the analysis and evaluation of arguments used and finally the synthesis of several theories or arguments

Multiverse Deism Leland Harper, 2020-05-28 Given recent work in quantum physics suggesting that our world is just one world in a series of many Leland Royce Harper calls for a shift in our concept of the monotheistic God of Judeo Christian tradition In Multiverse Deism Shifting Perspectives of God and the World Harper argues that those who wish to maintain that the Judeo Christian God exists ought to revise how they define this God and what they expect of Him so as to maintain consistency between modern theism and the growing body of scientific knowledge While this revision entails several concessions by the theist the overall result is a stronger and more coherent account of who God really is By removing the expectation that God will act in the natural world Harper argues that we are left with a concept of God that maintains all of the traditional divine attributes is consistent with current scientific advances remains compatible with contemporary and historical arguments for the existence of God and better refutes contemporary and historical arguments for atheism than the traditional active God
