

ENVIRONMENTAL POLLUTION ESSAY

Nature has its own balance. The environment, and hence all living beings rest on this delicate balance. However, human activities since the start of the Industrial Revolution have disturbed and continued to disturb this delicate balance. The result is an imbalance of nature that is detrimental to the normal functioning of Earth.

Environmental Pollution is releasing of unwanted elements into an environment. Environmental Pollution can be natural as well as man-made. However, pollution generated through human activities far outperforms natural pollution in polluting the environment.

As a result, almost all aspects of our environment have been polluted, resulting in various branches of Environmental Pollution such as Air Pollution, Indoor Air Pollution, Water Pollution, Soil Pollution, Land Pollution, Radioactive Pollution, Noise Pollution, Light Pollution, Digital Pollution, Electromagnetic Pollution etc.

The negative impact of Environmental Pollution is enormous. It can be hazardous for the health of Humans and all other organisms, for the ecosystem, and the food chain, and can even possibly lead to human migration.

Such disastrous impacts have led to a rise in awareness regarding Environmental Pollution. We can also do our bit by refusing to use non-biodegradable products such as plastic, using clean energy such as solar and wind energy, reusing and recycling certain kinds of products, reducing water consumption and much more
