

addition, only 3 per cent of participants in the training group had an unemployment spell a year after enrolment, compared to 9 per cent in the control group. On average, participants worked close to four weeks more over the year compared to the control group, and were also slightly less likely to receive Employment Insurance benefits in the year after enrolment.

- Improved health and well-being: Members in the training group were nearly 25 percentage points more likely than the control group to have reported a reduction in stress levels experienced in the workplace since enrolling in the UPSKILL program.

Effects on firms

- Increased customer satisfaction: Over 70 per cent of training group firms reported significant increases in satisfaction of hotel guests compared to less than 40 per cent of the control group. In addition, over 75 per cent of firms in the training group reported reductions in the incidence of customer complaints compared to less than 25 per cent of control group firms.
- Cost savings and productivity gains: Nearly half of training group firms had significant reductions in error rates, compared to only 20 per cent firms in the control group, translating into cost savings of about $1,000 per participating employee in the year after enrolment. Firms in the training group saved

While the firms that participated in this study were from the Accommodation and Food Services sector, benefits from essential skills training have been observed in other industries. BuildForce Canada, in its report titled, The Business Case for Essential Skills in Construction, established a link between essential skills upgrading during early apprenticeship training and ROI for employers.²⁹ Some results of the study are summarized below.

- Increased revenues: Firms that participated in training were 44 percentage points more likely to report an increase in customer loyalty. About half of training group firms having experienced an increase in occupancy rates compared to about a third of the control group. These gains in occupancy rates, along with the increased spending on food and beverages, added approximately $2,200 in incremental revenues per participant over the following year.
- Benefits were achieved with modest investment of workers' time: While the UPSKILL program offered a maximum of 40 hours of training, the amount of time that employers made available to participants to engage in training was, on average, just under 20 hours per participant.
