Introduction

- Explains why the topic of the research is important
- Summarises theories and past work that are relevant to the present study
- Motivates the present study by justifying present hypotheses

How do we explain why a topic of research is important?

1. Orient the reader towards the general topic of interest
2. Focus attention on ways in which the topic impacts society, generating opportunities or problems
3. Situate the topic with respect to its multidisciplinary research context

The rise of sophisticated technology has altered our daily lives considerably (Bonnafon, Shariff, & Rahwan, 2016) and has begun affecting employment. Automation has already spurred job losses across industries and threatens to replace the jobs of millions in the coming years (Amitz, Gregory, & Zierahn, 2017; Frey & Osborne, 2017). Given its economic effects, automation will be a key political issue in forthcoming years.

How do we summarize past work that is relevant to the present study?

1. Review key findings, noting IVs & DVs & how they were extracted
2. Avoid extraneous details. While study design is often crucial, key aspects should be noted
3. Sometimes a brief overview is enough
4. Signpost connections between past work and present research objectives

Beyond its economic effects, automation has several downstream social and psychological consequences, including, as we suggest here, shaping attitudes toward immigration. Recent studies have linked exposure to automation to support for political candidates and parties associated with restrictive immigration positions in the United States (Frey, Berger, & Chen, 2018) as well as in Europe (Anelli, Colantone, & Stanig, 2019; Dal Bò, Finan, Folke, Persson, & Rickne, 2018; Zhen & Mayer, 2017). In this article, we directly examine the relationship between concerns about automation and attitudes toward immigrants.
