

WATER QUALITY PARAMETERS & INDICATORS

Water quality describes the "condition" of water in natural systems. Water quality tells us just how clean and healthy the water is for humans. By testing water for a variety of tests, we develop an understanding of the water in the river.

Parameters that may be tested include temperature, pH, turbidity, salinity, nitrate and phosphate. The development of the aquatic macroinvertebrates test also provides an indication of water quality.

TEMPERATURE

Temperature of a system is important because it affects the amount of dissolved oxygen in the water. The amount of oxygen that fish breathe or some organisms need depends on the amount of oxygen in the water. At 67°F, cold water species like trout require less oxygen than warm water species like bass at 77°F.

Temperature also affects the rate of photosynthesis of plants and respiration rate of animals. Rates of development during and between life stages (larvae, pupae, imago) increase with the temperature. In organisms, it means the water must contain sufficient oxygen and other substances (nitrogen, phosphorus) to keep them alive.

Temperature keeps the water cool enough for the fish and other animals that live in the river and keeps the temperature stable from day to day.

SALINITY

Salinity is a measure of the amount of salt in the water. Salinity is usually highest where there is a lot of salt and lowest where there is no salt. Salinity is measured in parts per thousand (ppt). Salinity is a measure of the amount of salt in the water. The amount of salt in the water is a measure of the amount of salt in the water. The amount of salt in the water is a measure of the amount of salt in the water. The amount of salt in the water is a measure of the amount of salt in the water.
