Activity 1

Understanding Aggregate Demand

Aggregate demand consists of four components: the demand for goods and services from consumers, from business and government and foreign countries, and from the rest of the world. It represents all the demand in the economy.

When many demand curves are added vertically, we find that the aggregate demand curve is downward sloping. The reason for this is that as the price level falls, the quantity of goods and services demanded increases. This is because the price level falls, the quantity of goods and services demanded increases. This is because the price level falls, the quantity of goods and services demanded increases.
