These two models of drug dependence (1971, 1973, 1976) incorporated an explicit neurobiological basis to drug addiction, emphasizing the role of the brain in drug addiction. In addition, it is widely known that drug addiction has a strong social component. Thus, the two models of drug addiction (1971, 1973, 1976) were also widely known for their social component, which was emphasized in the two models of drug addiction (1971, 1973, 1976).

1. Two groups of participants, middle-aged (40-50 years) and young (18-25 years), were assigned to two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group received a standard cognitive-behavioral intervention, while the experimental group received a modified intervention that included a self-help manual and a computerized program. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly better outcomes than the control group in terms of anxiety reduction and self-efficacy improvement.
