

PARTICLE THEORY AND STATES OF MATTER

What is the basic structure of matter? Understanding the nature of matter and the arrangement of particles is fundamental. The arrangement and movement of particles explain various properties of the matter.

Particle Theory is the theory that all matter is made up of tiny particles. These particles have three characteristics of particles: they are very small, they are in constant motion, and they have spaces between them. The arrangement and movement of particles explain various properties of the matter.

States of Matter - Matter can exist in three primary states: solid, liquid, and gas. Each state has different properties due to the arrangement and movement of its particles.

Solid - In solids, particles are packed closely together in a regular arrangement. They have strong forces of attraction between them. They vibrate in fixed positions. They have a definite shape and volume.

Liquid - In liquids, particles are not so closely packed. They have more space between them. They have weaker forces of attraction. They can move past each other. They have a definite volume but no definite shape.

Gas - In gases, particles are far apart. They have a lot of space between them. They have very weak forces of attraction. They move randomly in all directions. They have no definite shape or volume.

Changes of State - Matter can change from one state to another. These changes are called changes of state. They are caused by heating or cooling. For example, melting is the change from solid to liquid, and boiling is the change from liquid to gas.

1. What is particle theory?

2. List all states of matter. Describe each state and its properties.
