Introduction

The Walt Disney Company (Disney) merged with 21st Century Fox (Fox) in 2019 in one of the most expensive mergers in history. The merger cost amounted to $ 71.3 billion and was a significant development in global media. Disney started in 1935 as a cartoon studio and evolved into sports coverage and television shows. Fox was founded in 1923 and is an American mass media company primarily dealing in the film and television sector. The merger saw Disney receive assets and intellectual property from Fox and was part of a longer-term strategic plan. Disney's newly acquired assets include 20th Century Fox cable stations along with a 30% share of the Hulu streaming service (Chen et al., 2021). The merger responded to customer preference for streaming services such as Netflix and Amazon over cable television. Disney was planning to launch its streaming service, Disney+, thus needed Fox content to persuade customers to subscribe to its service.

Financial Statements Analysis

Fox's annual report revenues included cable network programming, television, and filmed entertainment. Cable network programming was the primary source of income, accounting for 58% in the fiscal year 2018, while the total revenue was $30.4 billion. Disney had a market share of 15.6% in 2018 and Fox 8% before the acquisition (Collins, n.d). Comparing stock prices shows that Fox had a stable stock price than Disney. Disney was up 20% from 2015 to 2017, but the prices dropped before the merger.

Risks

The risks involved in the Disney and Fox merger could have future implications for the company. The most significant risk from including legacy assets represented by
