1. What is toxicology?

Toxicology is a field of science that studies the harmful effects that chemical substances or poisons have on people, animals, and the environment.

2. How does the field of toxicology use the "power of science?"

Toxicology uses the power of science to understand how chemicals affect the body and to develop treatments for people who are poisoned by chemicals.

3. When, during a person's life, are they most susceptible to chemicals?

People are most susceptible to chemicals during their childhood and young adulthood, as their bodies are still developing.

4. Give an example of something that is non-toxic becoming life-threatening to a person.

Water is a non-toxic substance, but it can become life-threatening if a person drinks too much of it, leading to water intoxication. This happens because too much water can dilute the body's electrolytes, which can lead to brain swelling.

5. According to this website, what is the role of a toxicologist?

8. What are the working conditions of a forensic toxicologist?

Forensic toxicologists work in a laboratory setting, where they analyze samples of blood, urine, and other body fluids to determine if they contain any toxic substances.

9. Why would you need to "go to court" to be a forensic toxicologist?

Forensic toxicologists often provide expert testimony in court, where they explain the results of their tests to the judge and jury.
