Operating Principles

2.2.7 Cap Mechanism

The cap mechanism covers the printhead nozzles from drying out keeps ink from drying inside the nozzle while the printer is not in use. The printer performs this operation automatically when just ink is not removed when power panel is turned off and during printing in idle system operations. (The power panel uses a secondary circuit that allows this operation to be performed.) Also the printer has 2 caps, 1 for the black head and 1 for the color head.

2.2.8 Wiping Mechanism

The wiping mechanism cleans the surface of the printhead nozzles when the printer is in the idle system operation. The wiper drive gear transmits power from the paper feed roller via the clutch gear. When the wiper is moved up against the printhead nozzles, the force for moving the carriage in the color position is moved, too. When the wiper gear starts around the bottom, there the back gear starts, too. Both the black head and the color head are cleaned by the wiper.
