Strategic Plan For Federal Research And Monitoring Of Ocean Acidification:

Strategic Plan for Federal Research and Monitoring of Ocean Acidification Office of Office of Science and Technology Policy, 2016-12-23 This document has three primary objectives 1 identify the needs and activities described in the Strategic Research Plan that are currently being addressed by Federal agencies 2 coordinate future Federal activities that are guided by and align with the goals of the Strategic Research Plan and 3 communicate Federal actions on ocean acidification to the public Implementation of the Strategic Research Plan will be an ongoing long term iterative process to ensure that Federal ocean acidification activities address goals outlined in the Strategic Research Plan In this ongoing work the IWG OA will be vigilant about identifying parts of the Strategic Research Plan not currently being addressed and when gaps exist Federal agency members of the IWG OA will work to address the needs that fulfill their mission Review of the Federal Ocean Acidification Research and Monitoring Plan National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Ocean Studies Board, Committee on the Review of the National Ocean Acidification Research and Monitoring Plan, 2013-07-03 The world's ocean has already experienced a 30% rise in acidity since the industrial revolution with acidity expected to rise 100 to 150% over preindustrial levels by the end of this century Potential consequences to marine life and also to economic activities that depend on a healthy marine ecosystem are difficult to assess and predict but potentially devastating To address this knowledge gap Congress passed the Federal Ocean Acidification Research and Monitoring FOARAM Act in 2009 which among other things required that an interagency working group create a Strategic Plan for Federal Research and Monitoring of Ocean Acidification Review of the Federal Ocean Acidification Research and Monitoring Plan reviews the strategic plan on the basis of how well it fulfills program elements laid out in the FOARAM Act and follows the advice provided to the working group in the NRC's 2010 report Ocean Acidification A National Strategy to Meet the Challenges of a Changing Ocean This report concludes that overall the plan is strong and provides a comprehensive framework for improving our understanding of ocean acidification Potential improvements include a better defined strategy for implementing program goals stronger integration of the seven broad scientific themes laid out in the FOARAM Act and better mechanisms for coordination among federal agencies and with other U.S. and international efforts to address ocean acidification Strategic Plan for Federal Research and Monitoring of Ocean Acidification National Science and Technology Council, National Science and Technology Council (U.S.) Staff, Interagency Working Group on Ocean Acidification, Interagency Working Group on Ocean Acidification Staff, Ocean Science and Technology Committee, Subcommittee on Ocean Science and Technology, Environment, Natural Resources, and Sustainability Committee, 2015-01-17 Human industrial transportation and agricultural activities have caused global atmospheric concentrations of carbon dioxide CO₂ to increase from a pre industrial average of 280 parts per million ppm to the current value of approximately 400 ppm IPCC AR5 2013 Atmospheric CO₂ concentrations are now higher than experienced on Earth for more than 800 000 years L thi et al 2008 and the rate of CO₂ release into the atmosphere is likely unprecedented in Earth history Kump et al 2009 H nisch et al 2012 Ocean carbonate chemistry is a natural buffering system but this buffering capacity is being compromised as a direct result of CO₂ absorption by the oceans and to a lesser extent by the absorption of nitric acid HNO₃ and sulfuric acid H₂SO₄ at the sea surface Doney et al 2007 The oceans have absorbed approximately half of the anthropogenic CO₂ emissions from fossil fuel use and cement manufacturing over the past 200 years Sabine et al 2004 This oceanic uptake of CO₂ causes changes to ocean chemistry Figure 1 including decreases in pH and carbonate ion CO₃²⁻ concentrations collectively known as global ocean acidification Figure 2 Since the beginning of the industrial revolution this uptake has caused a lowering of the surface ocean pH globally from about 8.2 to 8.1 Caldeira and Wickett 2003 Feely et al 2004 Caldeira and Wickett 2005 Feely et al 2009 which corresponds to a 26% increase in hydrogen ion concentration H⁺ acidity Reconstruction of past sea surface conditions suggest surface ocean pH has not been this low for at least 2 million years H nisch et al 2009 Orr et al 2005 predicted an additional decrease in average global ocean surface pH of 0.3 to 0.4 pH units over the 21st century As a consequence of ocean acidification the chemistry of the oceans is presently changing at a rate exceeding any known to have occurred for at least the past 20 million years Feely et al 2004 It is not presently known how the changes in seawater chemistry due to ocean acidification will affect marine organisms and ecosystems though potential responses of some organisms have been examined and based on current information changes in marine ecosystems appear to be likely Raven et al 2005 Some organisms appear to be particularly sensitive while others are not Doney et al 2009 Ries et al 2009 Ocean acidification can negatively impact organisms that use calcium carbonate CaCO₃ to build their shells or skeletons e.g. corals marine plankton and shellfish because it reduces the availability of carbonate ions which play an important role in shell formation calcification Changes in CO₂ and pH can impact other physiological processes as well affecting species growth survival fertilization embryonic larval development and behavior Fabry et al 2008 Prtner 2008 Doney et al 2009 There will likely be ecological winners and losers as a result of ocean acidification causing shifts in the structure and composition of marine food webs and ecosystems

Ocean Acidification Strategic Research and Monitoring Plan Elisabeth Irvine,2015 Ocean acidification is the process whereby seawater becomes less alkaline or more acidic It is a concern to Congress because of the potential harm ocean acidification may cause to marine resources and resource dependent industries and communities The chemistry of the Earth s oceans is changing as increasing amounts of anthropogenic carbon dioxide from the atmosphere dissolves into the water The intent of this book is to guide research and monitoring investments that will improve our understanding of ocean acidification and its potential impacts on marine species and ecosystems It will further the development of adaptation and mitigation strategies to conserve marine organisms and the resources and services provided by the ecosystems in which they live Acta polymerica ,1981 Journal of the Senate of the United States of America United States.
