PARTICLE THEORY AND STATES OF MATTER

What is the arrangement of particles in each state of matter? What is the change of state called? Can you give examples of substances that can do this?

Particle Theory is the theory that all matter is made up of tiny particles. These particles have two important properties: they are very small and they are in constant motion. The arrangement of particles in each state of matter is different. This is why matter can change from one state to another.

States of Matter There are three states of matter: solid, liquid, and gas. Each state has different properties. Solids have a fixed shape and volume. Liquids have a fixed volume but no fixed shape. Gases have no fixed shape or volume.

Changes of State Matter can change from one state to another. These changes are called changes of state. There are three types of change of state: melting, boiling, and condensation. Each change has a specific name and a specific temperature at which it occurs.

Particle Arrangement The particles in each state of matter are arranged differently. In solids, they are packed closely together. In liquids, they are more spread out. In gases, they are very far apart.

Energy and Changes of State Changes of state involve the addition or removal of energy. Melting and boiling require energy to be added. Condensation and freezing require energy to be removed.

States of Matter Diagram A diagram showing the three states of matter and the changes between them. It includes boxes for Solid, Liquid, and Gas, and arrows for Melting, Boiling, Condensation, and Freezing.
