Jupiter, the largest planet in our solar system, is a gas giant primarily composed of hydrogen and helium. It has a diameter of about 86,881 miles, which is more than 11 times that of Earth. One of the most distinctive features of Jupiter is the Great Red Spot, a massive storm that has been raging for over 350 years and is large enough to fit two or three Earths within it. Jupiter has a very strong magnetic field, which is about 20,000 times stronger than Earth's, and it has at least 79 known moons, including the four largest called the Galilean moons: Io, Europa, Ganymede, and Callisto. Each of these moons has unique characteristics; for instance, Europa is believed to have a subsurface ocean beneath its icy crust, making it a prime candidate for potential extraterrestrial life. Jupiter's atmosphere is characterized by bands of clouds, known as zones and belts, which are formed by the planet's fast rotation—taking just under 10 hours to complete one rotation. This rapid spinning creates powerful winds and turbulence in the atmosphere.

Jupiter emits more heat than it receives from the Sun, a phenomenon attributed to its slow rotation and the heat generated during its formation. It is also known for its faint ring system, which is composed of dust particles and small ice grains. Jupiter's many fascinating features have made it a target for numerous space missions, including the Juno mission, which studies the planet's atmosphere, magnetic field, and provides valuable insights into its internal structure.

2. How many moons does Jupiter have?
3. What is the Great Red Spot?

6. Why is Europa considered a candidate for extraterrestrial life?
7. How does Jupiter's magnetic field compare to Earth's?
8. What kind of planet is Jupiter classified as?
9. What is one unique characteristic of Jupiter's atmosphere?
10. Which spacecraft is currently studying Jupiter?
