

The British are Coming!

The British

Are Coming!

After the French and Indian war, England established and attempted to maintain economic and political control over the colonies in order to remain a world power.

England imposed strict control over the trade.

England taxed the colonies after the war to raise necessary revenue to help finance for the war, and pay for the troops and the cost of the war.

Colonies traded raw materials for manufactured goods

Colonies had to obey English laws that were enforced by governors. They had no representation in parliament.

The governors were appointed by the king or by the proprietors and the colonists resented their power.

Colonial Legislatures made laws for each colony and were monitored by colonial governors so that England could have strict control over the legislatures.

1774, the First Continental Congress met to discuss colonial frustrations.
