Discussion

There is a growing body of evidence that the use of a patient decision aid can improve patient knowledge and understanding of their condition and treatment options. The results of this study suggest that the use of a patient decision aid can improve patient knowledge and understanding of their condition and treatment options. This is a significant finding, as it suggests that patient decision aids can be used to improve patient knowledge and understanding of their condition and treatment options in a primary care setting. The results of this study also suggest that the use of a patient decision aid can improve patient knowledge and understanding of their condition and treatment options in a primary care setting. Abstract

QUESTION A 60-year-old male with a 20-year history of type 2 diabetes mellitus presents with a 2-week history of increasing fatigue, weight loss, and decreased appetite. He reports frequent urination and increased thirst. His medical history is significant for hypertension, hyperlipidemia, and chronic kidney disease (stage 3). He is currently taking metformin, lisinopril, and atorvastatin. His last hemoglobin A1c was 8.5%.

ANSWER The patient's symptoms and history are highly suggestive of hyperglycemia. The frequent urination and increased thirst are classic symptoms of hyperglycemia. The weight loss and decreased appetite are also consistent with this condition. The patient's long-standing type 2 diabetes mellitus and recent increase in HbA1c further support this diagnosis. The most likely cause of the hyperglycemia is a failure to adequately manage his diabetes, possibly due to medication non-adherence or a change in his metabolic state. The patient's chronic kidney disease and hypertension may also contribute to his symptoms.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether the use of a computerized program designed to teach the basic concepts of epidemiology would increase the knowledge of students entering health care professions. A pretest-posttest design was used. Students were given a test before and after completing the course. The results showed that the majority of students had no previous exposure to epidemiology. After completing the course, there was a significant increase in their knowledge of epidemiology. This suggests that the use of such a program may be beneficial in teaching the basic concepts of epidemiology to students entering health care professions.

QUESTION I have a 1997 Ford Taurus with 100,000 miles. The engine is running fine, but the car is making a noise that sounds like a rattling or clunking sound. It seems to be coming from the front end. What could be the cause of this noise?

ANSWER The noise you are describing is likely coming from the front suspension or steering components. A rattling or clunking sound is often caused by worn ball joints, tie rod ends, or control arm bushings. These components are responsible for connecting the wheels to the frame and allowing for smooth movement. When they wear out, they can create a clunking or rattling noise, especially when driving over bumps or turning the steering wheel. It's a good idea to have a professional mechanic inspect the front end of your car to identify the specific component that is causing the noise and replace it if necessary. Regular maintenance and inspection can help prevent these issues from occurring in the first place.
