Abstract
The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was conducted in a community-based setting. The participants were 30 women, aged 45-65 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of walking for 30 minutes, 3 times per week, at a pace of 3.0-3.5 miles per hour. The control group was instructed to continue with their usual level of activity. The study was conducted over a 12-week period. The participants were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The assessments included a physical examination, a blood pressure measurement, a heart rate measurement, a body mass index (BMI) measurement, and a psychological assessment. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the participants. The participants in the walking program had a significant decrease in BMI, a significant decrease in blood pressure, a significant decrease in heart rate, and a significant increase in psychological well-being compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract

The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 6-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a control group or an exercise group. The exercise group performed a supervised aerobic and resistance training program three times per week. The control group did not participate in any structured exercise program. Physical fitness was assessed by maximal oxygen consumption ($\dot{V}O_{2\max}$), heart rate reserve (HRR), and body mass index (BMI). HRQL was assessed by the EuroQOL-5D questionnaire. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly higher $\dot{V}O_{2\max}$, HRR, and BMI than the control group at the end of the 6-week program. The exercise group also had significantly higher scores on all five dimensions of the EuroQOL-5D questionnaire than the control group at the end of the 6-week program. These findings suggest that a 6-week training program can improve physical fitness and HRQL in sedentary middle-aged women.
