DRASTIC ,1985 Soil Survey ,2002 Renewable Energy Annual ,1995 Geometrical Geodesy Maarten Hooijberg,2007-12-18

Surveying a Century Ago As it was based on the principles of geometry and trigonometry surveying may be may be looked upon as a branch of practical mathematics Hence it was necessary that land surveyors and hydrographers should have a fair general knowledge not only of these subjects but also of all the subjects comprised by the term mathemat ics In addition the knowledge of mathematics required in ordinary chain surveying and levelling was not very extensive but in geodetical work the highest mathematical ability and great organising power were required for a proper conception and supervision of the operations Threlfall 1940 Only small area of a few hundred square kilometres can be accurately mapped and surveyed without a frame work since no difficulty is encountered because of Earth curvature In the past especially in hydrography due to the type of work surveying was carried out on the principles of ordinary practice but in a very rough manner rapidity of execution being of paramount importance the permissible error was sometimes large The relative positions of the main surface features were obtained by aid of portable instruments such as sextants and lead lines tide poles and logships Sketching just like military surveying was often filling in the smaller detail In contrary survey works done by the national mapping agencies NMAs were of a higher level and comprised the delimitation of boundaries as well as topographical surveys

Renewable Energy Annual 1998 with Data for 1997 ,2001 This is the fourth annual report published by the Energy Information Administration EIA which presents information on renewable energy consumption capacity and electricity generation data US solar thermal and photovoltaic collector manufacturing activities and US geothermal heat pump manufacturing activities It updates and provides more detail on renewable energy information than what s published in the Energy Information Administration s EIA Annual Energy Review 1997 The renewable energy resources included in the report are biomass wood wood waste municipal solid waste ethanol and biodiesel geothermal wind solar solar thermal and photovoltaic and hydropower However hydropower is also regarded as a conventional energy source because it has furnished a significant amount of electricity for more than a century Therefore the contribution of hydropower to total renewable energy consumption is discussed although hydropower as an individual energy source is not addressed Since EIA collects data only on terrestrial land based systems satellite and military applications are not included in this report 13 figs 44 tabs
