Chapter Summary

- Social stratification results in hierarchical differences and inequalities. Three important dimensions of stratification are social class, status, and power. In the money-based stratification system in the United States, wealth and income are the main determinants of social class. Since the 1970s, the United States has experienced increasing income inequality. However, the greatest economic differences in U.S. society are due to differences in wealth. People with great wealth often have high class, status, and power and can usually pass most of these advantages to future generations. Those who have little have a difficult time amassing their own wealth. The middle class in the United States has declined in recent decades, leaving a large hole in the stratification system between the lower and upper classes. In the United States, the measure of absolute poverty is the poverty line, the level of income people are thought to need to survive in our society. Members of minority groups, women, and children are overrepresented among the poor.

Inequality is one of today's greatest challenges obstructing poverty reduction and sustainable development. As the power of elites grows and societal gaps widen, institutions representing the public good and universal values are increasingly disempowered or co-opted, and visions of social justice and equity sidelined. This book explores the roles of elites and institutions of power in the deepening of social and economic cleavages across the globe by asking how inequalities have reshaped structures from the local to the transnational level and what consequences they have wrought. In addition, the contributors present examples of peaceful processes of policy change that have made societies greener and more socially just, levelled out social stratification and devolved power and resources from elites to non-elites or towards marginalized or discriminated groups. Based on cutting-edge empirical research, the chapters in this volume bring together conceptual thinking and a number of case studies from the Global North and South, combining different levels of analysis and a range of qualitative research methods to present solutions for closing the inequality gap.
