Bent Preisler,Ida Klitgård,Anne Fabricius,2011 This book views the international university as a microcosm of a world where internationalization does not equate with across the board use of English but rather with the practice of linguistic and cultural diversity even in the face of Anglophone dominance The globalization localization continuum manifests itself in every university trying to adopt internationalization strategies The many cases of language and learning issues presented in this book from universities representing different parts of the world are all manifestations of a multidimensional space encompassing local vs global diversification vs Anglicization The internationalization of universities represents a new cultural and linguistic hybridity with the potential to develop new forms of identities unfettered by traditional us and them binary thinking and a new open mindedness about the roles of self and others resulting in new patterns of communicative educational and social practices Christian Missions in Africa Reinhard Henkel,1989 Banking & SSC October 2019
