- Statistical significance: sufficient evidence to reject the null hypothesis and conclude that there is a difference in the observed frequency and the expected frequency. In other words, the observed frequency is significantly different from the expected frequency.

- There is a significant positive relationship between the number of years of education and the number of years of experience. The relationship is positive and significant at the 1% level. The coefficient on the education variable is 0.001, which means that for every additional year of education, the number of years of experience increases by 0.001 years. This is a very small effect, but it is statistically significant.

10. The respondents' definitions of "community" ranged from "people in the same neighborhood" to "the whole world" with one person's definition being "anyone who is interested in the environment." The respondents' answers also ranged from "the people who live in the same neighborhood" to "the whole world" with one person's definition being "anyone who is interested in the environment."

you observe that the good will would have been the natural inherent consequence.
