During the 1990s, the number of people in the United States who were employed in the health care industry grew by 100 percent. The growth was particularly rapid in the field of nursing, which saw a 150 percent increase in the number of people working in the profession. This growth was driven by a number of factors, including the aging of the population, the increasing demand for health care services, and the expansion of the health care industry into new areas such as home care and long-term care. The growth of the nursing profession has led to a shortage of nurses in many areas, particularly in the field of critical care. This shortage has led to a number of problems, including increased patient wait times, decreased patient safety, and increased costs of care. The nursing profession is facing a number of challenges in the future, including the need to expand the role of nurses, to improve the education and training of nurses, and to address the shortage of nurses in certain areas.
