Radiation and Revolution Sabu Kohso, 2020-09-11 In Radiation and Revolution political theorist and anticapitalist activist Sabu Kohso uses the 2011 Fukushima nuclear disaster to illuminate the relationship between nuclear power capitalism and the nation state Combining an activist's commitment to changing the world with a theorist's determination to grasp the world in its complexity Kohso outlines how the disaster is not just a pivotal event in postwar Japan it represents the epitome of the capitalist state mode of development that continues to devastate the planet's environment Throughout he captures the lived experiences of the disaster's victims shows how the Japanese government's insistence on nuclear power embodies the constitution of its regime under the influence of US global strategy and considers the future of a radioactive planet driven by nuclearized capitalism As Kohso demonstrates nuclear power is not a mere source of energy it has become the organizing principle of the global order and the most effective way to simultaneously accumulate profit and govern the populace For those who aspire to a world free from domination by capitalist nation states Kohso argues the abolition of nuclear energy and weaponry is imperative Focus On: 100 Most Popular
