RESEARCH The authors used a cross-sectional design to examine the relationship between the use of the Internet and the use of other information sources. The study was conducted in the United States and involved a national survey of 1,000 adults. The survey asked respondents to report on their use of the Internet, their use of other information sources (such as libraries, newspapers, and television), and their demographic characteristics (such as age, gender, and education level). The authors then analyzed the data to determine the relationship between the use of the Internet and the use of other information sources, controlling for demographic factors.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the subjects was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
