Abstract: The authors report on a study of the effects of a 10-week, 12-session, self-help program for children with anxiety disorders. The program was designed to help children learn to manage their anxiety and to help their parents understand and support their child's efforts. The program was evaluated using a randomized controlled trial design. The results of the study showed that the program was effective in reducing children's anxiety and improving their coping skills. The program was also found to be acceptable and feasible for both children and parents.

Abstract Staphylococcus aureus is a Gram-positive pathogen that causes a wide range of infections. It is a leading cause of hospital-acquired infections and is often resistant to many antibiotics. The purpose of this study was to investigate the prevalence of S. aureus in the nasal flora of healthy individuals and to determine the antibiotic resistance patterns of the isolates. A total of 100 nasal swabs were collected from healthy individuals and cultured on methicillin agar. The isolates were identified by Gram stain, catalase test, coagulase test, and DNA probe. The results showed that 85% of the isolates were S. aureus. The antibiotic resistance patterns of the isolates were determined by disk diffusion method. The isolates showed varying degrees of resistance to different antibiotics, with the highest resistance observed for methicillin (85%) and tetracycline (75%).

The Geometry of Genocide Bradley Campbell, 2015-10-29 In The Geometry of Genocide Bradley Campbell argues that genocide is best understood not as deviant behavior but as social control a response to perceived deviant behavior on the part of victims Using Donald Black s method of pure sociology Campbell considers genocide in relation to three features of social life diversity inequality and intimacy According to this theory genocidal conflicts begin with changes in diversity and inequality such as when two previously separated ethnic groups come into contact or when a subordinate ethnic group attempts to rise in status Further conflicts are more likely to result in genocide when they occur in a context of social distance and inequality and when aggressors and victims cannot be easily separated Campbell applies his approach to five cases the killings of American Indians in 1850s California Muslims in 2002 India and 1992 Bosnia Tutsis in 1994 Rwanda and Jews in 1940s Europe These case studies which focus in detail on particular incidents within each instance of genocide demonstrate the theory s ability to explain an array of factors including why genocide occurs and who participates Campbell s theory uniquely connects the study of genocide to the larger study of conflict and social control By situating genocide among these broader phenomena The Geometry of Genocide provides a novel and compelling explanation of genocide while furthering our understanding of why humans have conflicts and why they respond to conflict as they do
