Brunsmann, 1955 Library Journal, 1896 The Fertility Doctor Margaret Marsh, Wanda Ronner, 2008-10-31 As Louise Brown the first baby conceived by in vitro fertilization celebrates her 30th birthday Margaret Marsh and Wanda Ronner tell the fascinating story of the man who first showed that human in vitro fertilization was possible John Rock spent his career studying human reproduction The first researcher to fertilize a human egg in vitro in the 1940s he became the nation's leading figure in the treatment of infertility his clinic serving rich and poor alike In the 1950s he joined forces with Gregory Pincus to develop oral contraceptives and in the 1960s enjoyed international celebrity for his promotion of the pill and his campaign to persuade the Catholic Church to accept it Rock became a more controversial figure by the 1970s as conservative Christians argued that his embryo studies were immoral and feminist activists contended that he had taken advantage of the clinic patients who had participated in these studies as research subjects Marsh and Ronner's nuanced account sheds light on the man behind the brilliant career They tell the story of a directionless young man a saloon keeper's son who began his working life as a timekeeper on a Guatemalan banana plantation and later became one of the most recognized figures of the twentieth century They portray his medical practice from the perspective of his patients who ranged from the wives of laborers to Hollywood film stars The first scholars to have access to Rock's personal papers Marsh and Ronner offer a compelling look at a man whose work defined the reproductive revolution with its dual developments in contraception and technologically assisted conception Library Journal Melvil Dewey, Richard Rogers Bowker, L. Library, 1929 Library Manpower United States. Bureau of Labor Statistics, 1975 The Fertility Revolution Richard A. Easterlin, Eileen M. Crimmins, 1985-10 For most of human history a natural fertility regime has prevailed throughout the world there has been almost no conscious limitation of family size within marriage and women have spent their reproductive lives tied to the wheel of childbearing Only recently in developed countries has fertility been brought under conscious control by individual couples and childbearing fallen to an average of two births per woman The explanation of this fertility revolution is the main concern of this book Richard A Easterlin and Eileen M Crimmins present and test a fertility theory that has gained increasing attention over the last decade a supply demand theory that integrates economic and sociological approaches to fertility determination The results of the tests which draw on data from four developing countries Colombia India Sri Lanka and Taiwan are highly consistent though a number of the conclusions are likely to arouse controversy For example couples motivation for fertility control appears to be the prime mover in the fertility revolution rather than access to family planning services or unfavorable attitudes toward such services The interdisciplinary approach and nontechnical exposition of this study will attract a wide readership among
