Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in Ankara, Turkey. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. Physical fitness was measured using a series of tests, including a 1000m run, a 15m shuttle run, a sit-and-reach test, and a handgrip strength test. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher scores than the control group in all tests after 12 weeks of training. The study suggests that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet on the body composition and physical fitness of obese women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 20 obese women who were randomly assigned to either a diet or a control group. The diet group was instructed to consume a diet that was 1000 kcal less than their maintenance level. The control group was instructed to consume a diet that was equal to their maintenance level. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 10 weeks. The diet group showed a significant decrease in body weight, body fat, and waist circumference. The control group showed no significant changes. The diet group also showed a significant increase in physical fitness. The control group showed no significant changes. The results of this study suggest that a 10-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet is effective in reducing body weight, body fat, and waist circumference, and in increasing physical fitness in obese women.
