

Two Colour Mix (Harmonic)

In early experiments it helps to stay with colours that mix down into a result that is still pleasing, rather than a dull dark shade. To ensure this, simply use any two colours from those available between two primaries, a harmonic mix. Any two colours between red and yellow will end as some type of orangey tone. Any two between red and blue will end as some type of purple tone, either reddish or bluish. Any two, between yellow and blue, will become some shade of green hue, either yellowish or bluish.

Try working with blue and green. Put the colours onto the iron in separate banded areas, then when you apply the wax to the card, in the same direction as the bands of colour, they will stay clean and only mix where they meet in the central area.

Remember, for an A4 card (portrait size) you just need to cover the entire face of the line with wax colours; no silver metal left visible. That's perfect!

Place the loaded iron onto the card, as close to the end as possible. Wriggle the iron in that place very slightly to "bed it down". Then lightly and steadily move the iron along the length of the card to smooth on the colour. Don't press down, but "flow" the line along. You may need to work several strokes like this to get the wax evenly spread. If too much gathers at one end of the card then just smooth in the opposite direction with the iron until the card is covered.

The central area is already mixed, but now try placing the iron and moving from top-to-bottom of the card. As the colours become stirred together, they continue to mix down toward a central shade. This is what they will eventually create, in this case a bluish green.

As you begin to work in this way you may find that you wipe wax off the card. You can always add more wax colour at any time.

As you play with the iron in different ways, stirring the colours together, be watchful! The magic of Exquisite Art often comes along unexpectedly. Suddenly there is a shape or a form and colour that you really like. As soon as you like the result stop! You can always retreat and rework the card again later, but keep in mind that "happy" to you, that you find attractive. If you continue and change things, you will never be able to get back to what you had.

Creating a free-form or patterned abstract card using harmonic colours; blue and green in this case.

Load the iron with blue and green, then apply the molten wax colour onto the card by smoothing or placing the iron on and off the card a few times.

Slide the iron around and keep watching as the colours mix. This rounded shape looked like a sphere after the stroke was complete. Time to stop!

Starting at the top left corner, rest the iron on the card, lift off, move down about 15mm, then repeat with a new placement and lift off. Continue this to the bottom. A similar type of effect has been repeatedly created, starting from that top right corner. Finally, the iron tip was placed on the card. As the iron dragged backwards, it was also heavily topped from one curved edge to the other, and back again repeatedly, creating the "nettle" effect (see page 12). The "nettle" has a track to it and a lot of the flower comes to mind!
