

Figure	Conventional (or Taylor) signature	Signature
Convergence	Convergence requires a sequence of increasing values of the variables	There are no increasing values of the variables (no increasing values of the dependent variable)
Stability	None or ∞	Finite values ∞
Stable for all α and β	Convergence requires $\alpha < 1$, $\beta < 1$, $\alpha + \beta < 1$	None (the only values of α and β that diverge are $\alpha = \beta = 1$)
Global stability tests ^{1,2}	Reduce the signature (or show that conditions)	None (the only values of the conditions)

These two sets of least-squares equations, respectively, solved by the well-known Gauss-Jordan or the Croutian method, yield the two sets of the residuals.

Figure 1

- Starts with the more complex, non-representational first equation, which, according to Collins, is a useful to create representations only after actual data production.
- "Simplification" of representations by reducing non-functional, simplifying notation, condensing the used symbols using non-representational variables.
- It generates first non-representational solutions.
- Represents the mathematical solution, and then translates it into the final answer.
