Weird Tales from Northern Seas - Jonas Lie Jonas Lie,2010-02-20 A passage from the book Jonas Lauritz Edemil Lie was one of Norway s most prolific nineteenth century novelists The son of a town sheriff he grew up above the Arctic Circle in the city of Troms where his youthful impressions of the wild sea going life provided material for many of the stories in this collection first published in 1893 Weird Tales from Northern Seas was originally written in Danish which was the official language of Norway for many centuries As you might expect from your reading of the Brothers Grimm and Hans Christian Andersen these tales of the Northern Seas are not only weird but grim Grimmer than Grimm I should say The supernatural beings that haunt the shores and depths of the sea are uniformly malignant including the merfolk Even a seal looked so evilly and viciously at him with its bloodshot eyes that Elias thought he should have died on the spot for sheer fright

WEIRD TALES from NORTHERN SEAS (Annotated) Jonas LIE,2021-09-10 On Kvalholm down in Helgeland I dwelt a poor fisherman Elias by name with his wife Karen who had been in service at the parson s over at Alstad They had built them a hut here and he used to go out fishing by the day about the Lofotens There could be very little doubt that the lonely Kvalholm was haunted Whenever her husband was away Karen heard all manner of uncanny shrieks and noises which could mean no good One day when she was up on the hillside mowing grass to serve as winter fodder for their couple of sheep she heard quite plainly a chattering on the strand beneath the hill but look over she durst not They had a child every year but that was no burden for they were both thrifty hard working folks When seven years had gone by there were six children in the house but that same autumn Elias had scraped together so much that he thought he might now venture to buy a Sex ring 2 and henceforward go fishing in his own boat
