 Wilding of America essay

be a cleansing of an entire regime, which is in fact extreme wilding in the political, social and economic domains all for instrumental gain. The new king gains a vast amount of land and resources, they get the new status of king and they now have total political control over an area and can do whatever they want to in that area. This may not seem like the general sense of systematic wilding, such as a war or Wall Street scams and scandals, but it does display the same type of ideas behind it and it is a type of system that is continued.

Next, we take a look at how wilding is embedded in the origins of our culture. Well, for one when Americans came over to the New World, they were basically sent here because they were criminals (hence violent roots), they decided to attack the Indians who were helping them and thus to gain instrumental objects (land) they continued to do this for most of the United State's history, the American Revolution is yet another great example of this, our founding fathers wanted to be out from under the repression of one system and wanted to establish their own and have freedom, so with these few examples it is easy to see a history of violence in the origins of our culture. However, to bring it into the realm of the marketplace, the idea is probably a lot different than that. There has always been competition between individual people since the early part of society to get the necessities needed to survive. For example, food and water are necessary for survival and most people will do anything to survive.

After people began to realize that others want that kind of thing, so they decide to set up a market to be able to make it easier on themselves to get what they want. Before money was introduced this was probably along the lines of trading, but when money was introduced the idea quickly became on who could get the product and for how much. So, people wanted a lot of high quality stuff for a low price, so competitors would have to keep fighting back and forth between each other until one would finally give up, that way they could monopolize the material
