Science Project

After a project that humiliated her last year, she was determined to succeed this year. She was not working, creating an orange glow over the next month. Lauren had collected materials without her voice shaking. "Gee, I need your help. My science project—the one that humiliated me—is going to make my little brother, Casey, feel something good."

She decided to do a project about the earth. She showed all the dirt, looking worried. Together, they followed their mother around the house. First, they found a bowl of yellow glue leading to the backyard. Next, Casey's toy car was parked next to a broken cardboard box in the garage. Then, a series of muddy footprints led to the kitchen.

Finally, they found Casey hiding the evidence. "It was going to explode when I stepped!" Casey admitted, his hands covered in yellow glue and orange paint. Lauren sighed in relief and began gathering the materials to rebuild.

Working together, she and Casey researched the project just in time for Lauren to practice her presentation.
